Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Daughter of the Rogues: A Tale of the Rogue River Valley A Daughter of the Rogues I checked my jaded horse before a door toiled an old man in his garden there, And, much emboldened by his courteous smile, Besought him that a weary man might fare A day or so beneath his friendly roof. Aye, you are welcome in our home, he said, There s none to say he found no welcome here, - My wife and I are both Virginia bred, The latch string ever hangs from out our door. But she is old and sick, our fare is plain, So, for your comfort, I do not hesitate To point you to the weary trail again, Which, if you follow on for one brief mile, Will lead you to the Squaw Man . He, I know Can give you food and shelter, and he will, For he is kind, - leastwise I find him so, Though some there be that say he is morose And does not mingle with them. Even...
