Excerpt: .get a situation, Milly, he said the day before he left; and if I can I will send mother half my wages. I suppose there are plenty of people that would be glad to have you, said Milly. Yes: Mr. White has promised to make inquiries for me while I am away, so that I daresay there will be two or three places for me to choose from when I go back. But Arthur s expectations upon this matter were doomed to disappointment. Mr. White had not heard of anything when he reached London, and day after day passed without bringing him the wished-for intelligence. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, and of this bitter heart-sickness Arthur tasted as weeks passed; and to all Mr. White s inquiries of friends and customers whether they knew of a situation for a steady active lad, the...
